FREE RANGE

Old Truman Brewery, Brick Lane
1 June – 24 July 2006

Europe's largest free showcase of graduate art & design

If you want to discover the next Tracey Emin, Tom Dixon or Rankin, then follow in the footsteps of Charles Saatchi and visit the 6th annual Free Range during June-July. The show has become so successful that for two months it takes over most of the Old Truman Brewery's huge 11 acre site on East London's Brick Lane. Free Range provides a platform for art graduates to showcase their work in a unique environment whilst at the same time being a golden opportunity for talent scouts to headhunt the cream of the UK's art and design graduates.

This year's festival includes works from 2,200 students from over 50 of the UK's top art and design universities and colleges including Goldsmiths, University of the Arts (Central St Martin's, Camberwell College of Arts) and Ravensbourne. Disciplines include: Art, Photography, Design and Interiors.

Free Range co-ordinator, Tamsin O' Hanlon says, "Free Range is an explosion of talent on a massive scale. This is the best opportunity for industry players and the general public to discover artists in fledgling mode before reputations and prices soar!"

The high calibre of this year's Free Range includes Aowen Jin, from Goldsmiths College, who has an almost inexhaustible passion for her artwork. This has already earned her a commission to paint a portrait of the Queen as part of this year's royal birthday celebrations. Another of her works has also had the honour of being formally presented to Prime Minister Tony Blair. Aowen has included three images for her show at the Old Truman Brewery. One of these is featured far left - image 13 - entitled 'Two Left Feet'.

Time Out magazine describes The Old Truman Brewery as 'the creative hub of the East End' which follows ten years of sensitive regeneration and investment. It is now considered to be a destination point in its own right.
